10 Things to Find in a Goblin Guard Room

Although seen by other races as little more than short, mad homicidal maniacs, goblins are at least slightly organised. Normally, the entrance to the tribe's lair, or the approaches to the chieftain's chambers, are guarded.

1-1 A battered table stands in roughly the centre of the chamber. Its legs have been haphazardly hacked off to suit the goblin's size. The two benches have been treated in a similar fashion, but one of them stands at an angle.

Goblin Combat and Tactics

In battle, some goblins fight differently than their brethren

Combat and Tactics

1-1 This goblin hurls rocks at archer-types and spellcasters. Every time she hits, she screeches "Boom!" in Goblin.

2-2 An utter coward, this goblin screams and runs away as soon as anyone tries to attack him.

3-3 Terrified of injury, this goblin immediately retreats, if injured.

4-4 Drunk, this goblin is practically fearless. It charges into combat screaming in a

7-7 Chasing an escaped slave or prisoner

10 Things to Find in a Goblin Chieftain's Quarters

Goblin chieftains are often the cleverest, most cunning and violent members of the tribe. As such they have their own chambers and here can be found the choicest, least tasteful decorations and features.

1-1 This chieftain has a throne—well an ornate wooden chair—standing at the centre of a rickety wooden platform. The "throne" looks like the kind of chair you'd find at a noble's dining room table, but it has seen better days. A faded red cushion provides a modicum of comfort for the chief.

2-2 DIRTY, frayed rugs cover the floor. Arranged in a haphazard pattern, they comprehensively conceal what lies beneath. Paranoid PCs might suspect pits lurk beneath. Indeed, the rugs directly in front of the chief's throne have several suspiciously large dried bloodstains.
